

The visit to Canada in May 1939 by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, the first ever by a reigning monarch, was the silver lining for the war clouds that were rapidly forming over Europe. Everywhere the royal couple went, they were greeted by large and enthusiastic crowds. Less than four months later, on September 10th, 1939, Canada was at war again. The Second World War would not end until August 15th, 1945.
